

I Confess, Jaume Cabré

What a wonderful novel. The story of the protagonist's life, told in an unusual way, because he is also uncommon, although I won't tell you why. It's full of love and heartbreak, of friendship and betrayal; of deceit and secrets that slowly reveal themselves to us through the innocence of the protagonist. In the end, all he wanted was to write a love letter...

A Gentleman in Moscow, Amor Towles

Very original. How can one live a full life confined in a hotel? From the historical moment of the Bolsheviks' rise to power in Russia, the novel tells the story of an aristocrat sentenced to never leave the hotel where he resides under penalty of death.

From there, we witness a wonderful adaptation of the character to his fate, and with his attitude and great intelligence, he manages to live life to the fullest until the end of the novel, which, I'm sure, will bring a knowing smile to your face.

---

@CarmenHonrado

